Sociologist Cites Failure Of Middle East Pogroms, Since 1948, To Arouse Protests, As First Time In Modern History

Anti-Semitism in much of the world has become diluted, but by no means dissolved, since World War II. And in some areas, such as the Arab countries, it is as virulent as ever. These were among the findings of the day-long symposium on anti-Semitism since World War II, sponsored by the Conference on Jewish Social Studies at the Institute of Human Relations, 165 E. 65th Street, New York. An audience of 100, primarily social scientists, attended.

A paper prepared by Oskar K. Rabinowicz, vice-president of the Conference on Jewish Social Studies, stated that except for Nazi Germany, only the Arab countries have made anti-Semitism official state policy, says the New York Herald Tribune writer, Edward Silberfarb. And again, as only in Nazi Germany, the Arab states are attempting to export anti-Semitism, not just limit it to internal affairs, his report stated.

He charged that former Nazis have become advisers on anti-Semitism to Arab governments and that Cairo has become the official publishing, broadcasting, and exporting center for their ideas. He cited pogroms in Egypt, Iraq, Syria, and Yemen, all since the establishment of the State of Israel in 1948.

He said: "And this has been done in broad daylight, with boasted openness, without arousing any protests or counter-measures on the part of the big powers or the small nations, even where their own citizens are discriminated against.

"This is the first time in modern history that in the civilized world no such protests are made or counter-measures taken."

As for Germany, Kurt R. Grossman, consultant on German-Austrian affairs for the Jewish Agency for Israel, said: "Anti-Semitism in the post-war period in Germany has existed at all times, but I have to emphasize this, that no anti-Semitic movement exists in Germany today."

He said that though formal and overt anti-Semitism in that country is at a minimum, many of the old Nazi attitudes still exist, and, according to a 1959 poll, 62 per cent of the German population still had doubts about having Jews in their midst.

In Russia and the Soviet satellites, anti-Semitism has softened since the death of Stalin in 1953, but the recent arrests of Jewish leaders in Moscow, Leningrad, and Bulgaria may indicate a revival, says the New York Herald Tribune. Bernard Weinryb, professor of history at Dropsie College, Philadelphia, said: "It is too early to judge the significance of these isolated incidents," he said.

A note of cautious optimism came from Salo W. Baron, professor of Jewish history at Columbia University, who said racialism has been discredited since the Nazis, and "there is some expectation that the religious struggle will diminish in virulence, although it will probably not disappear."

He said bigots among Christians and Moslems might still fall back on the religious issue "when they want to attack Jews," but that religion would play a lesser role in anti-Semitism with "the three Western religions facing a majority in the world." He said Christians, Moslems, and Jews are becoming a minority with the growing importance of the Asian nations and their religions.

In the United States, although anti-Semitic exclusion in employment and other areas has diminished in recent years, anti-Semitic attitudes have remained "relatively constant." So said Prof. Melvin M. Tumin, a Princeton University sociology professor.

Prof. Tumin said that unlike the early part of this century when Jewish immigrants were unassimilated and unskilled, "today, it is increasingly difficult to tell a Jew from a non-Jew. They are alike in dress, manner, schools, and business."

In discussing "The Theological Aspects Of Anti-Semitism," Dr. A. Roy Eckhardt, a Methodist minister and professor of religion at Lehigh University, said:

"The Christians will stop hating the Jews when they stop hating Jesus. The nerve of anti-Semitism will be cut when Christians are brought to apprehend the divine forgiveness that overcomes hostility and guilt."

He said anti-Semitism among Christians is the result of their resentment toward Christ because He demanded self-abnegation, says the New York Herald Tribune. The Jews are His people, so the Christians attack them, using the excuse that the Jews killed Christ, Dr. Eckhardt said.

J.N.F. To Reclaim Land For 100,000 Families, To Cost $250 Million

Jewish National Fund of America approved a plan for the reclamation of 625,000 acres in Israel that will involve the settlement of 100,000 families at a cost of $250,000,000 over the next twenty years.

Action on this development program was taken at the Fund's triennial national assembly at the Willard Hotel, in Washington, D. C. Its details were outlined by Jacob Tsur, world chairman of the Jewish fund that has its headquarters in Jerusalem, says the New York Times. The Fund, the land-development arm of the World Zionist Organization in Israel, has affiliates in thirty-eight countries.

The affiliate in the U.S. pledged $5,000,000 annually and more for the next twenty years toward the world-wide goal of $250,000,000. The rest will be raised by Jewish communities in the West. Last December, Israel's Knesset (Parliament) designated the Fund as the sole accredited agency for soil amelioration, land development, and afforestation for Israel.

Mr. Tsur, former Israeli Ambassador to France and the Argentine, pointed out that 60 per cent of his nation's territory "is wasteland," located in the southern part of the Negev and in the mountains of Galilee and the rocky Judean Hills.

A feature of the Fund's reclamation project calls for the planting of 250,000,000 trees in the eroded areas. Mr. Tsur said that the vast stretches of barren land would be prepared for the ultimate settlement of about 500,000 persons.

Mr. Tsur said it was necessary to convert 200,000 acres of wasteland in the hills of Galilee and Judea to be utilized for agricultural settlements, says the New York Times. He noted that other acres could be used for afforestation. He emphasized that this conversion "can change the face of the country."

"Perhaps," he asserted, "one day we shall deserve the same compliments that have been paid to the Dutch who drained off the sea to win more land for their fertile fields."

Mr. Tsur stressed that the fulfillment of the Fund's plan "would double Israel's territory within her present boundaries without resorting to war."

The plan also calls for the building of 2,000 miles of road through the reclaimed areas. At the present time, Israel has 600 agricultural settlements. Under the new plan, 100 more settlements will be added. Groups of ten settlements, according to the plan, will be served by strategically located urban centers that will minister to the needs of the new settlers through hospitals, schools and shopping facilities.

Mr. Tsur appealed to American Jewish youth to go to Israel for short-term periods to contribute their knowledge and skills to the

Two Annual Jewish Conventions Heard Birch Society Denounced As Anti-Freedom

The Central Conference of American Rabbis denounced the John Birch Society for repeating "some of the worst evils of McCarthyism" at the same time the group called for the abolition of the House Un-American Activities Committee and condemned the Committee's film, "Operation Abolition."

The Conference, representing 800 Reform rabbis in the United States and Canada, held its seventy-second annual convention at the New Yorker Hotel, in New York, says the New York Times. The rabbis took their stand on the issues through a section-by-section adoption of a report prepared by the conference's standing commission on justice and peace, headed by the Rev. Dr. Leon I. Feuer, of Toledo, Ohio.

The conference declared that "while there is plenty of latitude within the American concept of democracy for the expression of liberal and conservative, even of radical and reactionary views, there is no place for the defamation of character; the use of the term 'Communist' to smear the reputation of persons whose views may differ from our own; for social intimidation and economic pressures used against individuals of unorthodox views and for the use of conspiratorial apparatus either by the Right or by the Left."

In calling for the dissolution of the Un-American Activities Committee, the rabbis declared:

"Our concern for the protection of individual conscience and dignity, as guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, prompts us to reiterate our conviction that the committee should be abolished. We join with the National Council of Churches and others who have denounced the committee's film, 'Operation Abolition,' as a distortion of accuracy and truth. We regard as gratuitous the committee's attempt to brand all its critics as subversive or dupes."

The motion picture was produced with the aid of the House committee. It has been attacked as a distortion of demonstrations that occurred during committee hearings in San Francisco last May, says the New York Times. It depicts student rioting that took place while the Committee was holding hearings on Communism.

The rabbis also gave their endorsement to the Peace Corps "as a constructive and imaginative program," but expressed their opposition to the Government's arranging of contracts with religious denominations on the principle that such contracts were a violation of the separation of church and state.

Eliahu Elath, former Israeli Ambassador to the United States, explained to the rabbis why his country had been extending aid to the new countries of Africa and Asia.

"For the first time in 2,000 years," he said, "we are again a free and independent nation with the chance of contributing as much as our limited means and opportunities allow to the well-being of other peoples."

A Professor of Law and Government denounced the John Birch Society at a meeting in Washington, D.C., of the National Community Relations Advisory Council, as "the least useful organization to appear on the American political scene in the last hundred years."

Prof. Alan F. Westin, of Columbia University, told a national conference of major Jewish groups that to adopt the Birch Society's "prescription of canceling out the twentieth century would rip apart the social structure and community consensus of the nation and would lead us into a quicksand of reaction."

At the same time, Dr. Westin asserted that the Birch Society was strongly capitalizing on racial tensions as well as on other domestic and foreign issues confronting the United States, says the New York Times. While predicting that the struggle for Negro equality would move increasingly this year into areas outside the South, Dr. Westin said that this would give rise to increased resentments against Negro neighbors and competitors.

"On this score," Professor Westin said, "the Birch Society has a promising position — anti-integration by compulsion — and the reservoirs of racial hostility, unless carefully and wisely controlled, could fill the society's well to overflowing. Should the doctrine of racial supremacy ever become a substantial force outside the South, it will take exactly the form of genteel anti-equality which Welch preaches."

Robert H. W. Welch Jr. of Belmont, Mass., is president of the John Birch Society.

The Council is the coordinating body of the national congregational bodies of Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform Judaism, as well as the American Jewish Congress, the Jewish Labor Committee, the Jewish War Veterans, and fifty-four Jewish councils in cities throughout the U.S.

The political future of the John Birch Society, Professor Westin suggested, depends on the political decisions of Senator Barry Goldwater, Arizona Republican.

"If he (Senator Goldwater)," Professor Westin asserted, "chooses to remain a Senate figure and a Republican Presidential hopeful, he will undercut the Birch Society, for it could embarrass him by its extremism, and it is not under his control. Already, Goldwater has called for Welch to resign as leader of the society because of his authoritarian policies and his charges against Eisenhower."

However, Professor Westin went on, if Senator Goldwater "should decide that the third-party route was his best course, he could mold the fundamentalist right into a cohesive movement and it would assume immediate political influence."

Professor Westin described the Birch Society as an "authentic, muscle-flexing, pure-bred specimen of right-fundamentalist organization," says the New York Times.

Speaking on the same theme, Joseph Roos, executive director of the Community Relations Committee of the Jewish Community Federation-Council of Los Angeles, declared that the Birch Society, and its activities, "is not a problem of specific and special concern to Americans of Jewish faith."

Mr. Roos said that it was a problem "of concern to all Americans who do not want our governmental institutions undermined and our free society destroyed."

Leader Cites Major Obstacles For Jewish Education

New York's Jewish community was warned that "major obstacles" stand in the way of giving children an adequate Jewish education at the present time. Addressing the fiftieth jubilee celebration of the Jewish Education Committee of New York, Inc., Dr. Azriel Eisenberg, executive vice-president, says the New York Times, cited these problems confronting Jewish educators:

Reaching unschooled children. Utilizing the summer months for teaching. Providing teachers. Rearing an American-born generation of Jewish leaders, and building a cohesive, religiously aware Jewish community. The committee met for a day-long session at the High School of Art and Design auditorium, with more than 1,000 in attendance.

As he detailed Jewish educational problems, Dr. Eisenberg observed: "Although we are doing more than ever before and a greater number of children are receiving a Jewish education, major obstacles still confront us."

The speaker outlined the inception of the Jewish Education Committee from the formation of the Bureau of Jewish Education in 1910 and the Jewish Education Association in 1921. They merged in 1939 into the present committee, which is an affiliate of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York. The Committee supervises more than 750 Jewish schools with 150,000 students.

Dr. Oscar Janowsky, professor of history at the College of the City of New York, says the New York Times, appealed to the Jewish community to foster higher standards of teaching salaries; accreditation of schools; and the "unification of fragment schools."

A TRUE JEW

BY HAYIM HAZAZ

(Hayim Hazaz (b. 1898) is one of the great writers of modern Hebrew fiction. He has written of Jews in the Ukraine and of the Yemenites in Israel. His novel, Mori Sa'id, translated by Ben Halpern, was published by Abelard-Schuman, New York, in 1956.)

At night the pioneers sat among the tents of their camp near one of the border areas and told each other stories under the light of the stars. They talked about various things: a small kibbutz as compared to a large one, the Jezreel Valley and Galilee, work and starvation and malaria, and the significance of Palestine. Some recalled the past, home and bygone experiences, things they had seen and heard. They wandered from subject to subject and from topic to topic until one of them began:

"My father left home. That is to say, he left this world. He threw off the yoke of earning his livelihood and of social conventions and spent all day and all night in the synagogue studying the Law and praying. All of a sudden he changed his conduct and character and no longer paid attention to the customs of the world. Sometimes, as you know, this may happen to a true Jew: he abandons his work and dealings, forsakes his family and secludes himself with God Almighty in holiness, ardor and devotion. In my childhood I witnessed a few of them; Jews, many of whose like could be found in the market place, wretched and ailing paupers upon whom the holy spirit descended and who withdrew from this world, like some revered and awe-inspiring saints — men of God.

"Well, let us leave the saint 'who shall live by his faith' and return to my story. While my father was secluding himself devoutly with God, we, his children, and especially our mother, were starving to death, as is self-evident. Our family was a poor one, burdened with many children, its support was easy enough as it was, namely, as difficult as splitting the Red Sea, and King Destitution reigned in our house, plucking various tunes with his finger on the strings, putting his thumb in his mouth and whistling from its corners. It seems that we were not born in an era of abundance.

"I was still a child in those days, between the ages of ten and eleven. In brief, I was an immature boy. Came the rainy season. I don't know what time of the year is good for the poor, but the rainy season is certainly not. Perhaps because they are of the same class, birds of a feather flock together. That year I had no warm overcoat and the winter was most severe — two things which don't like each other and which can't live under the same roof. Somewhere my mother found an old coat which a well-to-do man had thrown into the rubbish 'so it shouldn't be seen and found,' dressed me in it, and became overjoyed as if she had clothed me in plush and silk: 'This is not an overcoat but rather a heat wave in July! A heater brimming over with heat, a fire . . .'

"That overcoat, you can imagine, was the most wornout of garments, the worst of its kind and worse than the worst in the land. It was a lambskin coat, hard and heavy as a beam, as if a tailor did not make it with needle and thread but rather a carpenter with chisel and ax. It was filthy, smelly and disgusting like a pile of garbage, full of bald spots, torn and tattered, bangs of wool sticking out of it, bulging with balls and lumps of cotton, and most of its edges nonexistent. When I put it on, it swallowed me up, sucked me in and I became hidden in it like a little mole in a big fortress; it had not a finger's width under me and not a hand's span over me; it was only a ragged and bald coat, struggling by itself in the street, flapping in the mud and its hem dipping in puddles and its skirts dragging after it. This renegade coat became my downfall, a bagful of downfalls. Many a tear did I shed in order not to wear it; may it rot — that magnificent coat! How often I bawled, rebelled and struggled! But my mother bawled back at me and cried, and she uttered more dirges and evil sayings than can be found in Jeremiah. But I, who was a rascal from the time I left my mother's womb, a bastard, a bandit and a murderer, persisted in my rebellion. I had rather freeze, die of sickness than wear it! Finally I left it behind me and used to run out into the cold, snow and wind, ran and galloped, my face burning, my ears flaming like fire and the breath from my mouth bursting out in front of me like a column of smoke.

"Once, after lunch, I ran to the heder from the house. It was a severe winter day — a flaming fire! My father looked out from the synagogue and when he saw me skipping like a calf he came out to me. 'Hilya,' he said with a strange intonation and fixed his eyes on me in an askew manner — sideways.

"I stopped before him and remained silent. I was afraid he would reproach me for my light clothing. For I was only dressed in coarse trousers and a rag of a kerchief wrapped around my neck. Well, I stood looking down in shame, kicking the snow with the toe of my torn boot, flushing hot and cold, flushing cold and hot, and my teeth were chattering. My father took me by my hand but his grip was uncertain, his hand faint and limp, as if he were doing something outside his trade. I think he feared I would pull my hand away from him, as if I were angry with him and didn't consider him my father because he did not feed and support me in my hunger and did not dress me for the cold. He stood and caressed my hand quietly, bent over me and said nothing. But without words he appeased and placated and soothed me, stood there guilty and wretched as if he were guilty and couldn't face me.

"'Skipping,' he said quietly with a sad smile. 'It's cold today, a biting frost . . . I saw you skipping and running . . . fast, so fast, nimbly . . . with joy and trembling . . . with joy and trembling . . . 'And rejoice with trembling.' Wherever there is rejoicing there shall be trembling, and wherever there is trembling there shall be rejoicing . . .'

"Hearing this I felt bad. My heart fluttered like a bird and tears trickled down my throat, bitter tears burning like fire. At that moment I felt like . . . I don't even know myself what I felt like . . . to say something to him in order to dispel and mitigate the grief of his heart, something dear and hearty which one has no strength to say with one's mouth, to cry and grovel at his feet.

"'Well, son, run along, don't stand here.' My father shrugged his shoulders and sighed. And before I had time to raise my foot and do anything he grabbed me with his hand and lifted me off the ground. 'Would you like to . . .' He looked at me sideways and said with an outburst of joy, 'Let's hop! Skip! Let's skip on both worlds!'"

Hilya stopped talking and began to meditate upon various memories. Not too many moments went by before he came to himself and said: "Yes . . . that is how it was. Well, my father used to stay at the synagogue, secluded and detached from the rest of the world. In those days he began to fast at intervals. Yes, he used to stay in the synagogue fasting from Sabbath eve to Sabbath eve. I remember how my mother sent to tell him to come home, for Heaven's sake, at once and with no excuses. 'Tell him,' she ordered me, 'that poor wayfarers dropped in to stay overnight and that he should come home.' I ran to give him my mother's message. He was astonished and said: 'What would righteous people be doing in our house?' I said to him: 'Father, these are not righteous people, only poor people; poor wayfarers are at our house.' He was even more astonished and said: 'What would dwellers of heaven be doing in our house?'

"My father . . . he . . . he was an extraordinary man. He was unique. To this very day they still talk about his habits — various strange stories. They say that once two elderly kind women, Dobrish and Dawshil, went from door-to-door to collect charity for an impoverished woman in confinement. On their round they went into the synagogue and my father gave them a generous donation, five or ten pennies, all the money he had. They saw that he had emptied his pocket for them and they said: 'You gave us too large a donation.' He answered: 'The whole world is nothing but a trifle and you say that I gave too much.'

"I remember what he told my mother when she wanted to make him a pair of boots: 'You can't afford it.' When she showed him the money in her hand he asked: 'Could you make thirty pairs?' She was puzzled. 'Why do you need thirty pairs?' Right away he started to enumerate for her groups and groups of poor people, and descendants of poor people, and he went on enumerating and even after exceeding thirty the count was not complete. He changed his mind and said: 'No, only thirty won't do. I made a mistake in my counting.'"

"A remarkable man!" said one of the men listening.

"A true Jew!" another added quietly.

"Go on, Hilya! Keep on," he was urged from here and there. "Don't interrupt, fellows."

"I don't know what to tell," Hilya said. "He wasn't a practical man . . . I heard that once he was in the market square discussing business with storekeepers and merchants. They spoke about various things. One complained about the decline in business, and about

On Sabbath nights, in many Jewish homes in Canada, a decanter of Mazel Tov wine finds its place on the starched tablecloth, right beside the challah.

Mazel Tov is a wine with a taste you'll 'remember', a ruby red, richly sweet 'kiddush' wine made of Concord grapes grown in the vineyards of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mazel Tov made 'Kosher l'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year, for every "simcha".

A TRUE JEW

conditions for earning a livelihood getting worse, and about other things and trifles as people in the market square do. My father said: 'Man's business in this world is large and long, profound, very profound and very far reaching, from high above to deep below, and from deep down below to high above, from hither to yonder and from yonder to hither and to all corners of the world.' He explained it to them so well, with such joy and genuine grace, with such honest-to-goodness simplicity that his words entered the hearts of all his listeners.

"His words were effective because on that same day one of the storekeepers came to him in the synagogue to ask how to become a good Jew. My father told him: 'May my fate be like yours. Why, you are really a good Jew.' The storekeeper answered: 'I envy you for having so much enthusiasm, advice and clever guidance for worshipping God Almighty.' My father sighed from his heart and said: 'Don't envy me. A worthless man like me needs all sorts of advice and clever guidance, but you, thank God, are a good Jew without guidance.'

"Again, there is a story about another man from among these merchants who came to pour out his heart for being petty and bad. My father told him: 'I, too, am like this.' Sorrowfully the man replied: 'Something grieves me and I am sad.' My father said: 'When something pleases me I am overjoyed. The more I know that I am insignificant the better I really am.'

"With us, his children, he didn't concern himself much and once he said: 'You have a Father in heaven. You are God the Lord's children; cleanse your souls, pray to Him, and He will deliver you.' Nevertheless, he gave us a fine upbringing, whether our way or his way.

"In my childhood I was God-fearing and recklessly good-for-nothing in one package. I used to study the Law and worship God with ardor, pull off juvenile pranks with joy, get into arguments and fight with boys of my age. Later, I used to regret those juvenile pranks of mine, have inner struggles and find no peace anywhere. When my father noticed it he would take me close to him, speak much with gestures and signs to dispel these things from my heart.

I remember when he said once: 'Try to be always joyful and happy, Hilya. You will not be happy by arguing and fighting with the boys because these are the ways of the gentiles, be it between a man and his fellow, between nation and nation and between kingdom and kingdom. Better rejoice in the joy of Israel with holiness and zeal, even for no object, because the heart is joyful and good, because God's joy is our strength . . . Please, Hilya, stamp out the fire of desire at the bottom of your heart. Take to heart the fire of holiness, the flame of God which burns in the heart of every true Jew. Now then, hop! Let me see you dance before me. Hop! Hop!'

"This took place at the synagogue in the afternoon with nobody there except the two of us. My father was fasting that day as usual. At first, you can imagine, I was bashful and couldn't move a leg. But my father started out with a dance tune and prodded me. I picked myself up reluctantly, moved to and fro and assumed the postures of a dummy. Bit by bit my heart sparked my feet and I warmed up, flipping my feet, down and up, up and down, dancing and gliding. And as I danced I became more aroused and more and more excited while my father was chanting in rhythm with me over an open Gemara — his voice pleasing, very pleasing! He aroused me and prompted me, exclaiming and calling: 'Hop-la, now then, hop! And go now, hop! Go, go and go! . . .'

"After that, whenever he saw me bothered and troubled, he would wink and look at me with a smiling face and say: 'Remember, Hilya, the fun we had. A fine revel! People should have come from all corners of the world to witness that.'

"Nevertheless I was still at times depressed, gloomy and morbid. I was poor in good deeds and enthusiasm to worship God and struggled strenuously with myself. Stormy struggles! I prayed with great devotion, I recited the Psalms, the Supplications and the Pleas and sighed like an old man. I even went to the ritual bath to cleanse myself and got up during the night for midnight prayer — but no rest. It always seemed to me as if my prayers were not heard and my pleas not heeded, as if God shunned me and I was straying like a lost sheep.

"At that time, in my childhood, when I was only a boy of eleven, I was already an old man versed and experienced in everything. Furthermore, I acted like a righteous saint, having all the ups and downs of a saint, accompanied with hindrances, confusion and trying experiences. I am amazed at myself for having been like this, for having so many great virtues. Where did all this disappear to? The devil knows where all this disappeared to!

"Well, let's go back to the story. Once, at sunrise I rushed to the ritual bath. My father, who was just returning from the ritual bath, ran into me. Looking at me and noticing my dejected mood and gloomy face he stopped and said: 'Where to, Hilya?' I remained silent. 'To the ritual bath?' I looked down ashamed. 'Don't go, Hilya. You have no religious fervor today.' I felt even more ashamed and said: 'That's why I'm going, because I don't have religious fervor; no religious fervor.' He answered: 'A man must have fervor for the ritual bath! He should dip in the water while his soul is burning like fire! Like a fire which would not be extinguished even when dipped in water!'

"Well," Hilya went on after a silence and said in a low and hoarse voice, "later . . . a year before the war my father left town to start a life of self-imposed exile. He wandered from place to place, from town to town and from village to village. Infrequently, from time to time, once or twice a year he returned and spent a week with us, and then went away again. Yes . . . during the Tlutunik riots he was found in a small town nearby among the dead. His head was cut off . . . and . . ."

He stopped talking. Everyone remained silent. It was as if a heavy cloud hung over their heads. They preferred not to recall these calamities and concealed them among themselves, everyone in his own heart. But there is no story of a true Jew in this generation whose end was not in that calamity, and the more it is suppressed the more it crops up.

Translated from the Hebrew by I. L. Unger. This story is from the Jewish Frontier.

The marriage of Miss Marilyn Jane Yanover, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Yanover, of Belleville, Ont., to William Jampolsky, son of Mr. and Mrs. Abe Jampolsky, 50 Meadowbrook Road (formerly of Regina, Sask.), was solemnized on Saturday, December 23, at half-past five o'clock, at the King Edward Sheraton Hotel, by Rabbi Abraham L. Feinberg. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of ivory-shaded velvet, with an overskirt in redingote style; and a chapel train, edged in embroidery, of seed-pearl-beads on satin. A petallised, velvet headpiece held her finger-tip illusion veil; and she carried a white bible with green orchids. Mrs. Irving J. Aiken was the matron of honour; and Miss Beverly Yanover was the maid of honour, both sisters of the bride. Each wore a gown of ivory-shaded peau de soie, styled with cape-shaped overskirts which were lined with ivory-shaded velvet, longer at the back. The beaded waistline design was repeated in her jewelled, pill-box hat; with touches of the mixed orange blossoms in her bouquet. Ronald Jampolsky, the groom's brother, was the best man. The ushers were: Irving J. Aiken, brother-in-law of the bride; Morton Lechter, of Montreal, Que.; Dr. Robert Smolkin, of Cornwall, Ont.; and Jerome B. Simon, of Regina, Sask. A dinner reception took place at the hotel. Mrs. Jampolsky, the groom's mother, was in a long, bronze-coloured, peau de soie gown, which had a beaded overskirt; with a matching hat; and had a green orchid corsage pinned on her evening purse. # First Reform Temple Is Established In Center Of Jerusalem

Property containing land and buildings to house a Liberal synagogue in Israel have been purchased in Jerusalem by the World Union for Progressive Judaism.

This represents the first permanent site for a Reform house of worship in Israel. (Outside of the United States, the adjective Liberal or Progressive is also used.) The property will serve the Chugim Leyahadut Mitkademet (Circles For Progressive Judaism), one of three Progressive congregations in Israel. It will also serve as offices for the World Union.

Others are located in Herzlia and Nazareth. Until now all three congregations had been using rented facilities.

The announcement of the purchase was made by World Union president, Dr. Solomon B. Freehof, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who hailed this as another step in "the vitalization of a new spiritual life in Israel.

"The need for a religious life in Israel continues to become increasingly evident to the growing generation to whom nationalism itself is no longer an original idea. This is particularly noticeable with new immigrants who no longer need to struggle as their pioneering predecessors and are now absorbed into the life of the country. They immediately seek the same spiritual life that they had in Europe. Many are from Liberal synagogues," declared Dr. Freehof.

The World Union comprises Reform, Liberal, and Progressive synagogues in 22 countries with a membership of 1,500,000.

The American constituency of the World Union is known as the American Board and consists of the Central Conference of American Rabbis; the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and its affiliates; the National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods; and National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods.

The new property was purchased from the Israeli government at a cost of $70,000. The land encompasses 19,000 square meters and includes three stone buildings built 27 years ago, and a spacious garden which is surrounded by a stone wall.

The new synagogue site was made possible through the donation of a member of a Reform temple in the greater New York City area who wishes to remain anonymous.

The corner plot is located behind the Knesset Building directly adjacent to the Bezalel Museum in the heart of Jerusalem. The larger of the three buildings will be converted in March into a sanctuary, seating 200. The quarters will also include classrooms and meeting rooms and offices for the synagogue and the World Union.

In an interview at the World Union offices, 838 Fifth Avenue, New York City, Rabbi Hugo Gryn, executive director, forecast a general liberal trend in Israel in both religious and education development.

He based his views on the purchase of the new property as well as on a commitment of the World Union to build a new $75,000 secondary school for the Leo Baeck School on the French Carmel in Haifa. The school was established in 1939 with the aid of the World Union. It was re-named after the late Rabbi Leo Baeck, a founder of the World Union, when it was learned that he was arrested by the Nazis and put into a concentration camp.

The Baeck School is the only liberally oriented educational institution in Israel supported through funds from the World Union. It consists of an elementary school which was recently turned over to the Haifa Municipality and a High School which is operated privately. Both are directed by Dr. M. Elk. The school has 24 classrooms and over 1,000 students. The World Union assists it annually with pledges of 100 scholarships, 60 of which come from religious school pupils in Reform temples in the United States and Canada. Rabbi Gryn estimated that the World Union would spend a total of $200,000 during the coming year to meet the demands for Progressive religious and educational advances in Israel. He anticipated that these funds would be raised primarily in the United States.

"Our pace to aid Liberal Judaism in Israel has been increased as a result of the insistent request by Israel community leaders both in the cities and land settlements for immediate material and moral support," added Rabbi Gryn.

The World Union has Rabbi Jerome Unger working in Israel to aid Progressive groups in the founding of their new congregations. In addition, Rabbi Jay Kaufman, vice-president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, on sabbatical leave in Israel, will meet with European Liberal rabbis in that country who are now engaged in other work for the purpose of interesting them in giving direct help to new congregational groups.

Another program to increase interest in Liberal Judaism in Israel is a student exchange between the Baeck School and Reform temple youth in America, sponsored by the National Federation of Temple Youth which expects to create a first-hand understanding on the part of Israeli teen-agers of Reform Jewish religious life in a modern society of the United States, whereas youngsters from American Reform temples will attend classes at the Leo Baeck School and experience the Liberal educational life in Israel.

The first exchange has been completed. Three Israeli youngsters are returning to their country after a six-month visit, and three Americans are going to the Baeck School to begin their studies. The exchange students are: Marc Rosenstein, 1063 Golf Avenue, Highland Park, Illinois; David Wertheimer, 279 Sterling, Buffalo, N.Y.; Robert Herman, 7631 South Ridgeland, Chicago; and Ruth Chalfon, Zeev Harari, and Eli Rekhess, all of Haifa, Israel.

Progressive, Liberal, or Reform Judaism believes in the capacity for development inherent in the Jewish religion. It considers that it is the duty of each generation of Jews to bring the religious teaching and practices of their fathers into harmony with developments in thought, advances in knowledge, and changes in the circumstances of life.

World Zionist Head Says Job Is Far From Done

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Zionist Organization, charged recently at a Zionist Organization meeting in New York that American Jewry is suffering from "over-organized chaos, leading to over-lappings, waste of manpower and efforts, and a dangerous bureaucratization of American Jewish life, one of the greatest weaknesses of American Jewry. It is the only Jewish community in the world lacking a representative body which does not mean the rule of majority over dissenting minorities but would at least bring about coordination, reasonable discussion of its vital problems, and do away with the anarchy as it exists today."

Dr. Goldmann made these charges in setting forth the major problems facing world Jewry, particularly American Jewry, in strengthening the ties with Israel, and the furtherance of Jewish education as the main condition for Jewish survival.

He termed as one of the most shortsighted and dangerous illusions which is entertained, unfortunately, by many both in Israel and in the Diaspora, is that "the Zionist movement has fulfilled its major task by having brought about the creation of the State of Israel."

The world Zionist leader emphasized that while Israel is established and flourishing, the two major problems which will determine its future and its historical destiny are far from solved. He cited these problems as the consolidation and survival of Israel both security-wise and economically; and secondly, the forging of ties between the Jewish communities of the world and Israel which would make it the center of Jewish life and a new source of the spiritual and moral values which will safeguard Jewish survival.

"To solve any one of these two problems will require many years if not decades and both tasks can only be fulfilled if there will be a strong Zionist Movement mobilizing the Jewish people and rallying around Israel, playing the same rule Zionism has played in organising the Jewish people in its fight for the emergence of Israel," Dr. Goldmann said. "Within American Jewry Zionism has to fulfill a greater task than in any other Jewish community in the world. American Jewry is full of deep Jewish sentiments and feelings of loyalty to Israel and the Jewish people. But its contribution to Jewish life is still too much concentrated on philanthropical problems and it is far yet from making its leading position in Diaspora life felt by an adequate contribution to the defence of Jewish rights all over the world and participation in world Jewish problems."

Speaking of the situation within American Jewry, Dr. Goldmann called upon American Zionism to play a major role to solve all these vital problems. He warned that if American Zionism, by united action, will not become again a leading and guiding element in American Jewish life, it will be disastrous for the world Zionist movement as a whole and very harmful to American Jewry.

He voiced the hope that "primarily through the instrumentality of the American Zionist Council, in which the ZOA has to play a leading role, it will be possible to revitalize American Zionism and to enable it to fulfill the great historical task which the present position of Israel and the Jewish people imposes upon it."
